THINGS TO KNOW

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Like millions of people around the country, I tuned in to the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing on Thursday. I heard Christine Blasey Ford allege how Brett Kavanaugh sexually assaulted her in high school. I heard Kavanaugh deny Ford's story. And I watched as my Twitter feed exploded with reactions to those two testimonies all day. Whether you weren't able to tune in yourself, or you need some help digesting what unfolded over those hours (we wouldn't blame you for that, there was a lot going on), we've got you covered. Check out Metro's coverage of the testimonies inside and at metro.us.

METRO.USSEC SUES TESLA'S MUSK FOR FRAUD, SEEKS TO BAR HIM

The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission on Thursday accused Tesla Inc. CEO Elon Musk of fraud and sought to ban him as a director of a public company, saying he made a series of "false and misleading" tweets about potentially taking the electric car company private. The complaint, filed in Manhattan federal court, makes Musk one of the highest-profile executives to be accused by the SEC of securities fraud. It came less than two months after Musk told his more than 22 million Twitter followers on Aug. 7 that he might take Tesla private at $420 per share, and that there was "funding secured." Tesla was not immediately available for comment. Its shares fell 5.7 percent in after-hours trading. Musk has long used Twitter to criticize short-sellers betting against his company, and already faced several investor lawsuits over the Aug. 7 tweets, which caused Tesla's share price to gyrate. According to the SEC, Musk "knew or was reckless in not knowing" that his tweets about taking Tesla private at $420 a share were false and misleading, given that he had never discussed such a transaction with any funding source.

TRUMP, ROSENSTEIN DELAY
MEETING TO NEXT WEEK

President Donald Trump and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, who oversees the probe into Russia's role in the 2016 U.S. presidential election, agreed to delay a planned meeting until next week so as not to interfere with a Senate hearing for Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, the White House said on Thursday. Trump had expected to meet with Rosenstein to discuss a news report that Rosenstein had suggested secretly recording the president and recruiting Cabinet members to remove him from office. The two men talked and agreed to postpone their meeting, the White House said. There was widespread speculation earlier this week that Trump might fire Rosenstein following the New York Times story, but the president told a news conference on Wednesday that he would prefer to keep the deputy attorney general in his job. Rosenstein has denied the story as "inaccurate and factually incorrect." The article said that while Rosenstein had made the suggestions over concern about chaos in the administration, none of them actually came to fruition.

JAPAN'S ISLAND OF CATS

Cats wait to eat on Thursday in Aoshima, Japan. Aoshima island has come to be known for its large number of felines, which now outnumber humans by approximately 10 to 1. They were introduced on ships in the area but remained on the island and repopulated, with estimates placing the current population at around 200 compared to a human population of just nine. Like many rural areas of Japan, large numbers of residents have left the community to seek better job prospects in cities. Those now remaining, and often feeding the cats, are all pensioners.

NETANYAHU CLAIMS
SECRET IRANIAN NUKE SITE

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu described on Thursday what he said was a secret atomic warehouse in Tehran and accused Europe of appeasing Iran as he sought to rally support for U.S. sanctions against the Islamic Republic. Addressing the United Nations General Assembly, Netanyahu showed an aerial photograph of the Iranian capital marked with a red arrow and pointed to what he said was a previously secret warehouse holding nuclear-related material. He argued this showed Iran still sought to obtain nuclear weapons, despite its 2015 agreement with world powers to curb its program in exchange for loosening of sanctions. Netanyahu spoke four-and-a-half months after President Donald Trump withdrew from the accord, arguing it did too little to rein in Tehran's nuclear ambitions and triggering the resumption of U.S. economic sanctions on Iran. Netanyahu said the site contained some 15 kilograms (33 pounds) of radioactive material that has since been moved and called on the U.N. atomic agency to inspect the location immediately with Geiger counters.

HBO LEAVING BOXING
BUSINESS AFTER 45 YEARS

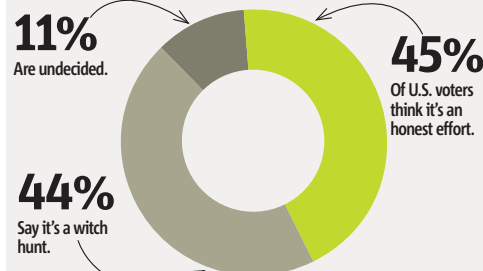

HBO said on Thursday it will be dropping live boxing from its programming schedule in 2019 due to dwindling ratings, ending a 45-year association with the sport. With the top fights on pay-per-view and boxing available on other platforms, such as the streaming service DAZN, which in May partnered with Matchroom Boxing in a $1 billion, eight-year deal to broadcast 16 U.S.-based fights a year, HBO has decided to put those resources into other projects. "Boxing has been part of our heritage for decades," said HBO Sports in a statement. "During that time, the sport has undergone a transformation. It is now widely available on a host of networks and streaming services. There is more boxing than ever being televised and distributed. In some cases, this programming is very good. But from an entertainment point of view, it's not unique." HBO burst onto the boxing scene in 1973, when it broadcast George Foreman's knockout of heavyweight champion Joe Frazier, and for 45 years it showcased some of sport's biggest names and bouts.

New Brooklyn Public Library branch on the books

nikki.mascali@metro.us

For the first time in 35 years, a brand-new branch of the Brooklyn Public Library is, well, on the books. It will be the system's first since the Cortelyou Library opened in 1983 and 60th overall.

The new Brooklyn Public Library branch will be located at 135 Plymouth St. to serve the DUMBO and Vinegar Hill neighborhoods.

WORKac, the New York-based architecture firm behind Issue Project Room, Kew Gardens Library and PS7 in East Harlem, will design it. The firm also redesigned the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The new Brooklyn Public Library branch will feature 6,500 square feet of mixed-use programming space, traditional book-lending services, computers and other tech.

"We are thrilled to begin work on the first new library in our system in almost 40 years," said Brooklyn Public Library President and CEO Linda E. Johnson. "We look forward to opening a newly designed library for the residents of DUMBO, Vinegar Hill and Farragut. Like every one of our branches, the DUMBO neighborhood library will be a place where the community can come together to read and learn."

Over the course of the next five years, one-third of the Brooklyn Public Library system will be rebuilt or fully renovated. According to a press release, the forthcoming new branch "was made possible in part through the proceeds of the redevelopment of the Brooklyn Heights library, which itself will bring online nearly 27,000 square feet of public library space as well as 114 affordable housing units in Community Board 2 by 2020."

While there are not yet any renderings or further information on the forthcoming new branch of the Brooklyn Public Library, system officials said it is slated to open by 2020.

BPL and WORKac will start a community input process for the development of the leased branch at 135 Plymouth St. this fall.

The Brooklyn Public Library is the fifth-largest system in the U.S. and the 2.6 million residents of the borough.

Kav denies, Ford is '100 percent certain' during hearing

Thursday's Senate hearing saw highly emotional testimony from both sides.

TWEETS

@realDonaldTrump
Judge Kavanaugh showed America exactly why I nominated him. His testimony was powerful, honest, and riveting. Democrats' search and destroy strategy is disgraceful and this process has been a total sham and effort to delay, obstruct, and resist. The Senate must vote!

@SenWarren
One way for Brett Kavanaugh to clear his name is to submit to an FBI investigation. But he refuses. And he won't release the thousands of documents from his gov't service. What is he hiding? A Justice should have honesty & integrity. Kavanaugh has neither – he should withdraw.

Fighting to salvage his U.S. Supreme Court nomination, Brett Kavanaugh angrily and tearfully denied on Thursday a university professor's accusation that he sexually assaulted her 36 years ago and complained about a "political hit" after she told a dramatic Senate hearing she was "100 percent certain" he did it.

Christine Blasey Ford, her voice sometimes cracking with emotion, appeared in public for the first time to detail her allegation against Kavanaugh, a conservative federal appeals court judge chosen by President Donald Trump for a lifetime job on the top U.S. court. Ford told the committee she feared Kavanaugh would rape and accidentally kill her during the alleged assault, when both were high school students in Maryland.

Kavanaugh testified after Ford finished her appearance, and they were never in the hearing room together.

"I swear today, under oath, before the Senate and the nation, before my family and God, I am innocent of this charge," Kavanaugh told the Judiciary Committee.

Calling himself a victim of "grotesque and obvious character assassination," Kavanaugh, speaking passionately, said he "unequivocally and categorically" denied Ford's allegation.

"I will not be intimidated into withdrawing from this process," Kavanaugh added.

The hearing, which riveted Americans and has intensified the political polarization in the United States, occurred against the backdrop of the #MeToo movement against sexual harassment and assault. REUTERS

THE FOREMAN FORECAST: AMID THE FLAMES

TOM FOREMAN

So who is telling the truth? You listened to their words, you heard the sharp questions, and one way or another the vote is on the way. Somehow through the inferno of that hearing, members of the U.S. Senate will have to come up with a decision about whether Brett Kavanaugh becomes a Supreme Court Justice.

On the Republican side, the goal was to bracket the testimony of Christine Blasey Ford as pure hearsay; a collection of smoldering memories fanned into flames by Democrats intent on burning Kavanaugh's nomination to the ground. It was a delicate task, to be sure.

Ford told a compelling tale of herself as a young woman, cornered and pawed by drunken, laughing young men — one of whom she says, was Kavanaugh. Questioned by an independent sex crimes prosecutor brought in by Republican members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, she defended her memory. But GOPers steadily pushed the idea that whatever happened (if anything) happened a long time ago, has not been backed up by evidence, and simply can not be sufficient grounds to incinerate a person's career.

On the Democratic side, the goal was the polar opposite, of course. Democratic lawmakers lavished praise on Ford for courageously speaking up, even as Kavanaugh denied her accusations. Then they added fuel to the bonfire around Kavanaugh, implying he was a frequent, nasty, violent, blackout drunk, as Kavanaugh sat stewing. And when he pushed back, he pushed hard, arguing such claims were based on nothing and driven more by partisan rage than any search for truth.

We saw anger. We saw tears. We saw cheap shots. It was, in short, all very messy, very bitter and laced thoroughly with pure politics on both sides — the kind of politics that make Americans of all stripes, all across the country, despise Washington.

But what do we really know as the smoke is clearing? He told one story. She told another. And what don't we know? Who will be vindicated when the vote is finally taken.

BRIEF

Kavanaugh's Supreme Court bid hinges on handful of senators

President Donald Trump's nomination of Brett Kavanaugh to the U.S. Supreme Court went before a Senate committee on Thursday, with dramatic testimony over almost nine hours from Kavanaugh and from a woman who has accused him of sexually assaulting her when they were high school students in Maryland in 1982.

The Senate Judiciary Committee, which heard from Kavanaugh and his accuser, Christine Blasey Ford, was expected to vote soon on his nomination, possibly as early as Friday.

If approved by the committee, the nomination would then go before the full Senate, where confirmation could hinge on a handful of key senators.

REPUBLICANS

Jeff Flake. A frequent Trump critic, Flake was complimentary toward Kavanaugh during his confirmation hearing earlier this month.

Susan Collins. A moderate who sometimes breaks from party ranks, Collins told reporters that if Kavanaugh had lied about allegations of sexual misconduct, "that would be disqualifying."

Lisa Murkowski. An occasional party renegade, she has not said how she will vote. Earlier in the day she told Reuters: "I find Dr. Ford's testimony to be credible."

DEMOCRATS

Heidi Heitkamp. Facing a re-election campaign in North Dakota, a heavily pro-Trump state, she had called for further investigation of Ford's allegations.

Joe Manchin. Also up for re-election, in the pro-Trump state of West Virginia, he met with Republicans late Thursday.

Joe Donnelly. Donnelly is up for re-election in the red-leaning state of Indiana. He has said the allegations against Kavanaugh "merit further review." REUTERS

Channing Tatum, Common go back to the classics with 'Smallfoot'

The stars open up about how their new animated flick channels old-school Warner Bros cartoons.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

When Channing Tatum was approached about the leading role of Migo in "Smallfoot" he was given a relatively simple pitch.

"They said it was a group of Yetis at the top of the mountain that believe that nothing exists below the clouds," Tatum recalls. "Then my character Migo is confronted with a human, a smallfoot, something that he believes shouldn't exist, which knocks off base everything he thought was true."

But rather than the story, it was the chance to reimagine the classic Warner Bros. and Looney Tunes cartoons of his childhood that instantly persuaded Tatum to sign up.

"The most important thing to me was the tone of the animation," says Tatum. "They told me the comedy was going to be like the old school Warner Bros. and Looney Tunes cartoons, which was what I grew up on. So I was really excited by it."

Not only did that immediately make "Smallfoot" unique in comparison to its animation peers, but it also gave Tatum the chance to make a modern version of a Wile E. Coyote and Tom & Jerry cartoon. Only this time, the legendary anthropomorphic animals are Yetis.

"This is categorically different to something like Pixar movies. You know, they make masterpieces. The first 15 minutes of 'Up' is probably some of the best film that has been made in the last 30 years," says Tatum. "But it is a different tone. It really makes you think. More and more people are trying to make an animated film for everybody."

"But those films are starting to skew more to adults than they are for kids. As far as just joy and fun factor. This film was made with the silly sort of feel," he adds. "That let's just be silly and fools. Because you can't really hurt these Yetis. And it reminded me a lot of Will E. Coyote and Tom & Jerry. It was really nostalgic for me."

This was a comparison that was immediately obvious to Common, who plays Stonekeeper, the mysterious Yeti tribe chief, too.

"Despite all of the technological advancements sometimes you can bring it just back to the essence of what animation is," says Common. "Not that we are straight old school with it. But it does have the freedom and the energy and the child like qualities that I always loved in the cartoons that I loved growing up. But it still has substance to it."

"Smallfoot" is now in theaters.

NFL WEEK 4: Avoid both Giants, Jets

MetroBet takes a look at NFL Week 4.ROBERT CRISCOLA
letters@metro.usNY JETS @ JACKSONVILLE
JAGUARS (-7.5)

This is a big spread for a game in which the betting total is 38.5 points, but the Jaguars look like the right side.

Sam Darnold has been shaky under center at times, and he'll face his toughest assignment yet as he travels to Jacksonville. Darnold doesn't have a perimeter weapon capable of beating cornerback Jalen Ramsey on a regular basis. The Jags are a little vulnerable against the run (21st by YPG), but Isaiah Crowell and Bilal Powell have been held to an average of 74.5 YPG in the last two weeks.

Blake Bortles need only manage the game, not win it. His defense should help him gain the upper hand in the field position battle throughout.

Jacksonville continues to trend positively in spite of last week's clunker; they're 4-1 ATS in their last five, and 4-2 ATS in their last six at home.

The pick: Jaguars -7.5

MIAMI DOLPHINS @
NE PATRIOTS (-7)

The Patriots have dropped two straight, but both of those games were on the road. New England has been highly successful at home lately, posting a 7-3 ATS record in their last 10 games in Gillette Stadium. In fact, Bill Belichick and company have won their last eight home games by an average of over 14 points, per oddsshark.com.

Sam Darnold might have a tough time with the Jaguars' defense. GETTY IMAGES

The Dolphins will be tested for class as they travel to Foxboro on Sunday. They've beaten the Titans, Jets and Raiders, all teams that may finish under .500 this year, to get to 3-0. And all three victories were decided by one possession. Miami's been a terrible bet as an underdog, dropping five of their last six ATS. Expect that trend to continue as Tom Brady and the Patriots attempt to right the ship.

The pick: Patriots -7

NEW ORLEANS SAINTS
(-3) @ NY GIANTS

The Saints (2-1) have delivered uneven efforts through their first three games, but the Giants (1-2) have looked worse against inferior opponents. They scraped by a now 0-3 Houston squad that looks lost and was more than happy to turn the ball over at home and help Eli Manning and company leave with a win. Before that 27-point outburst, New York scored 28 combined through two weeks.

Now the Giants' mediocre defense (13th by PPG) faces their most daunting assignment of the year in Drew Brees and his assorted weapons. Odell Beckham Jr. might have himself a day, but expect New Orleans to prevail, especially if a track meet breaks out.

The pick: Saints -3
